

ARCTIC ENCOUNTERS:

Indigeneity, Environmentalism,
and the Politics of Knowledge

This course explores the increasing interactions between indigenous knowledge systems and Western science in the production of environmental policy. We will use current environmental debates in the Arctic as a case study, but the course will highlight issues of indigeneity, colonialism, knowledge production, and power that are applicable throughout the world.